Tobin, 2012-11-12 This volume provides a needed elaboration of theories and potential applications of constructivism in science education Although the term constructivism is used widely there has been a dearth of materials to guide science educators concerning the potential of constructivism to influence what is done in the field In fact there has been a tendency for constructivism to be viewed as a method that can be used in a classroom This view tends to diminish the power of constructivism as a way of thinking about education and in particular about science education The chapters in this book address the need to document the theoretical roots of constructivism and to describe how practitioners have applied constructivist oriented beliefs in the practice of K 12 teaching of science and mathematics as well as teacher education Not only does this book contain different theoretical perspectives on constructivism but it also features a chapter that critiques constructivism as an epistemology Specific topics covered include cooperative learning the negotiation of meaning problem centered learning social construction of knowledge science in culturally diverse settings curriculum planning and implementation and instructional technology Issues associated with the preparation and enhancement of science teachers and the reform of science education are also explored Advances in Drug Research, 1995-09-05 Volume 26 continues the trend of shorter more frequent volumes With Volume 25 the series gained a new co editor Urs Meyer While retaining the commitment to publish chapters on therapeutic or chemical classes and on general topics or concepts the series coverage has expanded to include methodological chapters and new areas of recognized or potential significance to drug research especially in molecular pharmacology The Stigma of Genius Joe L. David Peat, 1984 Toward a Critical Politics of Teacher Thinking Joe L. Kincheloe, 1993-03-30 This book calls for a new type of teacher education that empowers teachers to be self-directed professionals Joe Kincheloe believes that the current trend of teaching teachers to learn an empirical knowledge base which they then implement in their classrooms is demeaning to teachers and teaches them not to think He cites for example the emphasis on lesson plan format the writing of behavioral objectives and pre-packaged activities One way to achieve thoughtful empowerment is through critical action research or teaching practitioner thinking The author illustrates the roots of his theory in Deweyan learning through action and in the more modern active learning approach He then applies Piagetian constructivism and critical hermeneutics to develop a post-formal model of practitioner thought which he labels critical constructivism Kincheloe theorizes on the ways such a model would impact teaching and learning in a college of education Autonomous self-reflective critical thinking teachers who take their profession seriously must understand the political consequences of this approach states the author as it will change the face of the school and elicit a backlash of opposition While the book develops a unique vision of practitioner thinking it is also firmly grounded in the realities of school life and is written in an accessible style that is not geared to one specific group
