

Periodontal Flap Surgery

The most versatile and commonly used surgical approach in periodontal treatment

A periodontal probe has revealed a deep area of tissue detachment or "pocket." Other signs of disease are inflamed gums and bone loss around the tooth.

The first step is to clean and disinfect the tooth root surfaces. A small incision is made to create a "flap" through which the diseased areas are accessed.

To replace bone that has been lost, pre-packaged bone-grafting material is often placed in the gap and protected by a barrier membrane.

Flap surgery has created the conditions necessary to restore health. New bone forms and inflamed tissues heal.
