The Voice That Would Not Stop Talking Dee Dee Walker, 2013-04. All of us have probably encountered that little voice at some point in time that talks inside our head, you know the voice. The one that says yea and the other that says nay. The one that tells you to stay when you know you should go or the one that tries to disrupt your daily activities by interfering with your knack for life. Well, that is the voice that the author so candidly talks about in her book. Have you ever wondered what it would be like if the voice never stopped talking? In this book, the author describes what it was like living with that voice. She describes it like listening to your favorite talk show host who never shuts up, sort of like the ladies on The View and Kathie Lee and Hoda. The only difference is she could not turn the channel or turn off the tube to silence the voice. The voice was cruel, merciless, and told her ghastly things similar to a journalist reporting alarming news. Only it was destined to destroy her, affecting every aspect of her life, including her ability to work, focus, and concentrate. However, before allowing the voice to completely destroy her, a family member's expertise and understanding directed her in the preeminent pathway to revitalization. This book is based on true events as the author remembers. Most of the events are written sequentially. Others she skipped around in hope to make the events a little more interesting. The author believes everyone has a story, and if sharing your story will help you or others feel encouraged, she encourages you to share your story.

Conversations with Grandpa and Some Ernie Hausmann, 2004-04-22. Why did I write this book? I wanted to describe how children of various ages think and feel. What better opportunity could I have had than to be able to communicate with my thirteen grandchildren? My wife Britta and I are fortunate to have six of them living in the same community as us. These grandchildren I get to see them often. We go on overnight hikes and work out together Sunday mornings. Four of our grandchildren live six hundred miles away in Indianapolis. We only see them three times a year. Once a year we rent a cottage together somewhere on the beach. Three others live in Jerusalem. We see them once a year. Whenever we visit, we all go to a resort together for a few days. I do speak with all my grandchildren on the phone at least once a month, although only some are old enough to carry on a little meaningful conversation. Some adults have the mistaken belief that children are just little adults and that they think like adults do A motivation for this book was to test the hypothesis was true As you might hypothesize this proofed not to be true A major part of this book represents an interview with each of my grandchildren dealing with various aspects of the children's lives This I believe has been the case Furthermore I included my diaries of two trips my wife and I took with some of my grandchildren one with my oldest grandson to the Grand Canyon and the other site seeing to Washington D C with three of the grandchildren These diaries contain different responses made by the children after different experiences Lastly I included a section called Gems which represents truly precious comments different children had made This three pronged presentation the question and answer portion the gems the diaries of trips we made together should provide insight into the thinking of children in general or at least my grandchildren What is reasonable to conclude from this book about my thirteen grandchildren All children are different is once again confirmed This of course everyone knows but sometimes forgets Therefore generalizations were difficult but individual characteristics were worthy to mention Some features that were clearly demonstrated are honest stating of views a sense of humor social consciousness and a sense of responsibility In writing this book two conclusions come to mind with firm conviction One is that children's views are worthy of adult attention and it can be great fun for a grandfather to interact with his grandchildren
