

WINTER TANTRUMS

TIPS

By now, you've probably noticed that your child is having a winter tantrum. It's a common occurrence, and it's usually a sign that your child is feeling frustrated or overwhelmed. There are a few things you can do to help your child through this difficult time. First, try to identify the trigger. Is your child hungry? Tired? Overstimulated? Once you know the cause, you can take steps to prevent future tantrums. For example, if your child is hungry, make sure they are eating regularly. If they are tired, make sure they are getting enough sleep. If they are overstimulated, take them to a quiet place to calm down. Second, when a tantrum does occur, stay calm. Your child is looking to you for guidance, and if you lose your temper, it will only make the situation worse. Instead, try to remain patient and use simple, clear language to help your child understand what is happening. Finally, once the tantrum is over, praise your child for their good behavior. This will help them learn that they can handle difficult situations without resorting to tantrums.
