Abstract

This article provides a feminist reading of a neglected text: victimology founder Benjamin Mendelsohn's essay about rape victims and the law, 'Rape in Criminology and the Importance of the Female Judge' (Mendelsohn Benjamin in La Giustizia Penale I-II-III-IV:28–50 1940). Following the heuristics of feminist socio-legal scholarship, my reading unsettles the established origin story of victimology and furthers feminist knowledge about the persistence of rape myths. I show victimology sprang from Mendelsohn's work as a rape trial lawyer and was a vehicle for modernising rape myths, brought into being in response to rape survivor-corroborating advancements in forensic science. Mendelsohn's 'bio-psycho-social' method of criminal defence sought a modern scientific foundation for rape myths, mobilising biological, psychoanalytic and sociological knowledge to contrive new grounds for invalidating complainant testimony as corrupt data.

Introduction

Bringing a long and curious silence to an end, this article provides a feminist reading of Benjamin Mendelsohn's 1940 essay 'Le Viol en Criminology et l'Importance de la Femme-Magistrat' ('Rape in Criminology and the Importance of the Female Judge', hereafter 'Rape in Criminology'). Mendelsohn is a founding "father of victimology" (O'Connell 2008, 98) and is both lauded for innovatively extending the gaze of criminology beyond the offender to the victim, and criticised for shaping

Criminal Justice Research and Development United States. National Advisory Committee on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals. Task Force on Criminal Justice Research and Development, United States. National Advisory Committee on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals, 1976 Intended for federal state and local policymakers in the area of criminal justice research and development this report includes guidelines for improvement of the quality relevance and utilization of research results In order to cover these issues part two of this report focuses respectively on the needs of research and development policymakers who fund criminal justice research and development researchers who conduct research and development and practitioners who put research and development results into use Guidelines and principles are proposed which should assist policymakers at all levels of government However some topics tend to be addressed more to the federal level where major research and development decisions are often made. The first chapter of this part presents a detailed discussion of institutional support for criminal justice research and development. It describes the federal role in supporting this effort, focusing on who the agencies are, the extent of their involvement, and how the principal agencies are organized to manage their research and development programs. Recommendations regarding the research and development management activities of criminal justice funding agencies are included. Several important issues in the conduct of criminal justice research and development are examined in the second chapter. Among the topics discussed are constraints on research, ethical issues, research designs and methodologies, prerequisites for sound planning and project selection, ways of maintaining the confidentiality of data, and ways of making data more easily available for research and statistical purposes. The final chapter of this section discusses research and development utilization practices and the assumptions underlying current policies in this area. A criticism of these policies and recommendations for new strategies is presented. The final part of this report provides an analysis of the kinds of problems often encountered in research and development. Three general types of criminal justice research and development are discussed: technology (e.g., hardware research), research on problems of criminal justice organizations (e.g., arrest, prosecution, sentencing, and parole), and research on new criminal justice problems. For each type of research and development, the relevant issues and recommendations are discussed. Most of these, however, are still related to either the support or conduct of research and development. The report also attempts to provide concrete illustrative examples by raising the relevant issues in the context of crime prevention at commercial and residential sites, technology research, sentencing research on problems of criminal justice organizations, and problems of the victim research on new criminal justice problems.
