study analyzes how against calculated probabilities and within a relatively short time period Romania has stabilized and assembled all the basic ingredients for a successful transformation from a centralized system to a market driven economy. The lessons derivable from Romania's relatively successful experiment with systemic transformation could be beneficial to reform architects in all newly liberalized economies in Eastern Europe. The conclusions of this study reinforce the view that it is imperative to examine and foster the existing preconditions including political institutional and financial components before subjecting an economy to extensive and intensive shocks that could be judiciously mitigated or circumvented. Unlike other newly liberalized economies in Eastern Europe where the once disgraced Communists have returned to power, sympathy for a centralized system has been steadily and swiftly declining in Romania. The primary factor in Romania's success, the author claims, is its circumspect approach to reform.

Privatization, Liberalization, and Destruction László Csaba, 1994. The volume is a selection of papers devoted to key issues of economic transformation: privatization, liberalization, the role of the financial sector and external economic relations. The interplay of these four areas of transition strategy forms the backbone of the collection.

An Antidote to Shock Therapy Peter Murrell, 1992. Privatization and Economic Reform in Central Europe Dennis A. Rondinelli, 1994-01-26. A fundamental characteristic of the global economy during the 1990s is the reinvigoration of the private sector as the driving force for economic growth and social progress. This book surveys Central Europe during the early period of transition from late 1989 to early 1993 when governments were experimenting with privatization and economic reform and assesses how privatization and economic reform policies have changed the business climate there. Rondinelli and his contributors provide an overview of economic reforms in Central European countries, offer a framework by which to compare them, describe the approaches to privatization their governments adopted and identify the problems and challenges that each country faces in attempting to create a market oriented economy. The result is a valuable resource for international management, international trade policy makers and scholars of international business. The process of economic restructuring is especially important and particularly complex in Central Europe where Poland, Hungary, the Czech and Slovak Republics, Slovenia and other independent states of former Yugoslavia are struggling to transform themselves from socialist to market economies. Each country faces equally complex challenges, however, in creating a new business climate that will nourish domestic enterprise and attract investments by multinational corporations. These challenges include:

1. privatizing state owned enterprises that have dominated the economies of socialist countries
2. developing public policies and programs that support the private sector, especially small and medium scale enterprises
3. decentralizing the state administrative structure to allow regional and local governments to play a more active role in providing public services and supporting private enterprise
4. restructuring industry, agriculture and services in order to diversify and reinvigorate the economic base, including infrastructure of regions surrounding cities that are still dominated by heavy and now largely obsolescent manufacturing industries.

This book surveys the situation in Central Europe during the early period of transition in the early 1990s when governments in all four countries were experimenting with privatization and economic reform The authors assess how privatization and economic reform policies have changed the business climate in this important region of the world The editor provides an overview of economic reforms in Central European countries offers a framework by which to compare them describes the approaches to privatization their governments adopted and identifies the problems and challenges that each country faces in attempting to create a market oriented economy Privatization, Stabilization, and Liberalization Chengxin Ouyang,1999 The Romanian Economic Reform Program Mr.Dimitri G. Demekas,Mr.Mohsin S. Khan,1991-06-15 This paper outlines the main characteristics and the development of the centrally planned economic sysetm in Romania before the beginnings of the transition to a market economy it then presents the design objectives and implementation of the reform program From Shock to Therapy Grzegorz W. Kołodko,2000 The great transformation undertaken by the countries of the former communist bloc exhibits immense diversity in terms of initial conditions shifting target models consistency paths speed progress to date and economic performance This is the first comprehensive study of the economics and politics of postsocialism to be written by an author so deeply and so successfully involved in the reform process Many people writing on the reform process offer advice that is not really credible as a member of the Polish government and architect of the successful Polish reform Grzegorz Kolodko actually solved many of the difficulties of transition which allows him to come forward here with policy proposals and long term forecasts The treatment of the transition from plan to market as a historical process is an important feature of the book The author claims that there is no historical fatality that sound policies in the present are more determining than the favourable or unfavourable legacies of the past The aim is to create and maintain the conditions for sustainable growth and durable development Shock Therapy in Eastern Europe Amy L.
