His father Thomas Sheridan was for a while an actor manager at the Smock Alley Theatre in Dublin but following his move to England in 1758 he gave up acting and wrote several books on the subject of education and especially the standardisation of the English language in education After Sheridan s period in Harrow School his father employed a private tutor Lewis Ker who directed his studies in his father s house in London while Angelo instructed him in fencing and horsemanship In 1772 Sheridan fought two duels with Captain Thomas Mathews who had written a newspaper article defaming the character of Elizabeth Ann Linley the woman Sheridan intended to marry In the first duel they agreed to fight in Hyde Park but finding it too crowded they went first to the Hercules Pillars tavern on the site where Apsley House now stands at Hyde Park Corner and then on to the Castle Tavern in Henrietta Street Covent Garden Far from its romantic image the duel was short and bloodless Mathews lost his sword and according to Sheridan was forced to beg for his life and sign a retraction of the article The apology was made public and Mathews infuriated by the publicity the duel had received refused to accept his defeat as final and challenged Sheridan to another duel Sheridan was not obliged to accept this challenge but could have become a social pariah if he had not The second duel fought in July 1772 at Kingsdown near Bath was a much more ferocious affair This time both men broke their swords but carried on fighting in a desperate struggle for life and honour Both were wounded Sheridan dangerously being borne from the field with a portion of his antagonist s weapon sticking through an ear his breast bone touched his whole body covered with wounds and blood and his face nearly beaten to jelly with the hilt of Mathews sword His remarkable constitution pulled him through and eight days after this bloody affair the Bath Chronicle was able to announce that he was out of danger Mathews escaped in a post chaise
