

1. Prospectus development

The National Park Service develops a prospectus.

Outlines the business opportunity, including the requirements of the contract (services to provide, any capital investments) and past financial information for the concessions operation so that concessioners can decide whether to submit a proposal.

Interested concessioners develop a proposal in response to the prospectus.

2. Contract award

Evaluation panel

An evaluation panel composed of Park Service staff considers all timely proposals received and scores them.

The five principal selection factors used in scoring:

1. How the bidder will protect, conserve, and preserve park resources.
2. How the bidder will provide required visitor services at reasonable rates.
3. The bidder's experience providing similar services.
4. The bidder's financial capability.
5. The franchise fee offered by the bidder.

Points are tallied, and a contract is awarded to the proposal with the highest score.

The selection factors are each scored out of a certain number of points.

3. Contract management

Following the award of a contract, the relevant park unit oversees the concessioner's performance and contract compliance and prepares an annual rating throughout the contract's term.
