Recruiting Youth in the College Market M. Rebecca Kilburn, Beth J. Asch, 2003 How can military service be made more compatible with college plans instead of being perceived as an alternative to college These essays examine trends in high school seniors intentions to enlist or to attend college and compare civilian and military education programs Youth with interest in the military are likely to see themselves as two year college material so offering a stipend higher pay or other means of offsetting the cost of attending school may be an effective recruiting strategy with this group Recruiting Youth in the College Market. Current Practices and Future Policy Options ,2003 Military recruiting has become more difficult in recent years For the first time in two decades the services failed to meet their recruiting targets for fiscal year FY 1999 While the unusually strong labor market of the 1990s undoubtedly played some role in recent recruiting difficulties another long term demographic trend is likely to also contribute to recruiting woes the large growth in college attendance in recent years Traditionally the services have targeted the recruitment of those youth who have no immediate plans to attend college However because high quality youth are increasingly likely to choose to attend college right after high school the services may benefit from considering whether they could target this group The services might be able to significantly expand their pool of potential recruits by adopting policies that target youth who plan to go to college or who actually do go to college immediately following high school We call this group youth in the college market Handbook of Defense Economics Todd Sandler, Keith Hartley, 2007-04-12 The second volume of the Handbook of Defense Economics addresses defense needs practices threats and policies in the modern era of globalization This new era concerns the enhanced cross border flows of all kinds e g capital and labor flows revolutionary rhetoric guerrillas and terrorists including the spillovers of benefits and costs associated with public goods and transnational externalities i e uncompensated interdependencies affecting two or more nations These ever increasing flows mean that military armaments and armies are less able to keep out security threats Thus novel defense and security barriers are needed to protect borders that are porous to terrorists pollutants political upheavals and conflicts Even increased trade and financial flows imply novel security challenges and defenses Globalization also underscores the importance of a new set of institutions e g the European Union and global governance networks and agents e g nongovernmental organizations and partnerships This volume addresses the security challenges in this age of globalization where conflicts involve novel tactics new technologies asymmetric warfare different venues and frightening weapons Volume 2 contains topics not covered in volume 1 i e civil wars peacekeeping economic sanctions the econometrics of arms races conversion peace economics and the interface of trade peace and democracy Volume 2 also revisits topics from volume 1 where there has been a significant advancement of knowledge i e conflict analysis terrorism arms races arms trade military manpower and arms industries All of the main securities concerns of today are analyzed Chapters are written by the leading contributors in the topic areas Up to date surveys on the pressing defense issues theoretical empirical and policy
