January

A green bench welcomes visitors to rest and enjoy the garden outside the window of Monet's first studio. The shutters, here open to allow the sun in, are closed every night. The pink studio house is covered with Boston ivy. The clinging sempervirens vine—a gift by L'Éclaircie school of roses—runs shades of red and burgundy in the autumn, transforming the house once again. Monet's favorite 'Hermod' rose climbs a trellis next to flower beds that are generously planted with lavender shades of pinks and white and mauve. Some of the roses are 'Champion' roses. Sweetly scented golden English wallflowers are interspersed with standard roses that provide more height and structure.
