Psychopharmacology & society: why is psychopharmacology important?

Why is psychopharmacology important for psychologists?

Aim: change behavior

(Psychologists are psychopharmacologists, and they are the best, because you don't get all the side-effects from pills)

Approach: change molecules

It is a two-way relationship, if you change someone's behavior you change their molecules/neural chemistry as well, but if you change someone's molecules in their brain, you also change behavior.

Should psychologists be allowed to prescribe drugs?

"Prescriptive authority: renewed action in the states" five states (New Mexico (2002), Louisiana (2004), Illinois (2014), Iowa (2016), and Idaho (2017) now allow psychologists the right to prescribe psychotropic medications – three of them since 2014. → Only with PhD, special postgrad training, and license to practice independently What does this momentum mean for the future of this expanding proficiency?

- Yes: "Most psychotropic drug prescriptions are written by general physicians who know very little about psychiatric mental health diagnosis or treatment" - American Psychological Association
- No: "Mental illness and psychotropic medications affect not only the brain, but all organ systems. Psychiatrists obtain a four-year medical education with a focus on anatomy, physiology, and pharmacology" – American Academy of Child & Adolescent Psychiatry

Are drugs good or bad?

A brief history of LSD

A history of LySergic acid Diethylamide

- Ergotamine, produced by fungi on rye (Claviceps purpurea), so you would get the drug by eating the bread
- Ergotism (Saint Anthony's fire)
 - o Dancing plague of 1518?
