Christian Parenting David P. Setran, 2022-06-21 What can the past teach us about what it means to be a good Christian parent today Today's parenting guidance can sometimes feel timeless and inviolable especially when it comes to the spiritual formation of children in Christian households But even in the recent past parenting philosophies have differed widely among Christians in ways that reflect the contexts from which they emerged In this illuminating historical study David Setran catalogs the varying ways American Protestants envisioned the task of childrearing in the seventeenth eighteenth and nineteenth centuries Comparing two main historical time periods the colonial era and the Victorian era Setran uncovers common threads opposing viewpoints and the cultural and religious influences behind the dominant parenting postures of each era The implications of his findings matter for today's big questions about parenting Should children be viewed as basically good in need of protection from corruption or as fundamentally sinful in need of moral correction How should parents address misbehavior Should a parent's primary role be that of teacher disciplinarian or nurturer What importance should be attributed to devotions and prayer church involvement Sabbath keeping home decorating and fun family activities What consideration should be given to gender Should boys and girls be raised differently Do mothers and fathers have essentially different responsibilities As he surveys these historical perspectives Setran reflects on the legacy and future of Christian parenting concluding that the Protestant heritage encourages the importance of intentional devotional practices the development of close parent child bonds and the creation of godly household environments In the end he argues that all of these historical values are critical to the full expression of Christian parental love This is a love that teaches because it wants to help children understand true goodness that admonishes and restrains because it wants to protect children from whatever keeps them from true pleasure and joy that fosters strong relationships so children might experience the lavishness of God's love that models Christlike sacrifice and guides children into the arms of their Creator

Studies in Character Building; a Book for Parents Ella Ervilla Eaton Kellogg, 2013-09 This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book without typos from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1905 edition. Excerpt: Dealing with Some Common faults Who can understand his errors? Cleanse thou me from secret faults. Little children have faults. All parents have a duty to aid them in overcoming these defects. The child's fault in many instances is the outworking of a natural tendency as selfishness, obstinacy, etc. Others are acquired habits as idleness and disrespect. These latter may be styled preventable faults and it largely remains with the wise and careful parent as to how few of such shall be incorporated into the child's character. The correction of established faults is one of the most difficult of tasks. There is no patent way of accomplishing the work. Each child must be dealt with upon an individual basis according to his own special needs and proclivities. This necessitates a thorough understanding of the child and requires of parents much thought and effort coupled with Divine aid. It necessitates making a continual search for right ways and best ways, studying to fathom motives and causes. The fault must be analyzed and the treatment directed as the skilled physician directs his treatment of a bodily ailment toward the rooting out of the cause. Not infrequently the parent may be surprised to find the cause at his own door so to speak. Children are apt imitators. Both the good and the evil they observe in the conduct of those around them are readily reflected in their own behavior so that with the small child nearly every fault is at first a borrowed one. A single occurrence may not greatly affect the child unless it be something of such an unusual character as to merit his special attention and because of this becomes emphasized upon his mind but the constant recurrence in his presence of a good thing or of an evil thing.

Narcissistic Parenting in an Insecure World Harry Hendrick, 2016-07-06 In this provocative history of parenting Harry Hendrick analyses the social and economic reasons behind parenting trends. He shows how broader social changes including neoliberalism, feminism, the collapse of the social democratic ideal and the new behaviourism have led to the rise of the anxious and narcissistic parent. The book charts the shift from the liberal and progressive parenting styles of the 1940s-70s to the more behavioural, punitive and managerial methods of childrearing today made popular by experts such as Gina Ford and Supernanny Jo Frost and by New Labour's parent education programmes. This trend, Hendrick argues, is symptomatic of the sour, mean, spirited and vindictive social norms found throughout society today. It undermines the better instincts of parents and therefore damages parent-child relations. Instead, he proposes parents should focus on understanding and helping their children as they work at growing up.

Parenting to Build Character in Your Teen Michael S. Josephson, Val J. Peter, Tom Dowd, Tom P. Dowd, 2001 Building character in teens is a matter of teaching them to know the good, love the good and do the good.
