The Effect of Parenting Stress on Children's Cognitive Development Tamara Coon,2007 Little research has focused on children s age sex and race ethnicity as variables that may moderate the relations between parenting stress and children s cognitive development Using Bronfenbrenner s 1986 bioecological systems theory as a basis this study used a sample of mothers and their children who participated in the Early Head Start Research and Evaluation Project to examine the effects of parenting stress when children were 14 months old on children's cognitive scores on five measures when children were 24 and 36 months. Hierarchical multiple regression analyses revealed that there was a significant negative association between 14 month parenting stress and 24 and 36 month child cognitive scores. Analyses on four measures indicated that this relation was not moderated by child sex. However, analyses on two measures suggested that European American and African American children showed stronger negative relations between maternal parenting stress and children's cognitive outcomes than Mexican American children.

Cognitive Development Among Young Children in Ecuador

Christina H. Paxson, Norbert Rüdiger Schady, 2005. Paxson and Schady examine the relationship between early cognitive development, socioeconomic status, child health, and parenting quality in a developing country. They use a sample of over 3,000 predominantly poor pre-school age children from Ecuador and analyze determinants of their scores on the Spanish version of the Peabody Picture Vocabulary Test (TVIP), a widely used test of language ability. The authors show that median age normed test scores on the TVIP are much lower for older than younger children and there is greater dispersion in scores.

among older children They find that household socioeconomic characteristics in particular wealth and parental education are protective children from wealthier households with more educated parents have higher scores The associations of test scores with wealth and maternal education are larger for older children suggesting that these factors have cumulative effects on cognitive ability Last the authors show that child health and measures of parenting quality are associated with performance on the TVIP Children with lower hemoglobin levels perform worse on tests Measures of parenting quality in particular the degree to which parents are responsive and harsh toward children and whether children are read to account for a portion although not the majority of the association between socioeconomic status and cognitive development
