

How can we get partial waves from complete experiments?

still for the purely mathematical problem (infinite precision, zero errors) suppose the complete experiment is done with 8 observables and ~ 20 angles are measured (good up to $L \sim 10$)

this gives us a discrete set of energies and angles for helicity or CGLN amplitudes, which are exact, but reduced by an unknown phase, depending on energy and angle

Can these reduced amplitudes be decomposed in partial waves?

If we do this just straightforwardly, can we use them for N^*, Δ resonance analysis?

from my point of view: No!
