
Parental Involvement in School Activities and Student Reading Achievement – Theoretical Perspectives and PIRLS 2011 Findings¹

Eva Klemenčič, Plamen V. Mirazchiyski
and Andrés Sandoval-Hernández

This article is concerned with involvement of parents in their children's education. Research on the topic suggests that students whose parents take an active role in their school activities are more likely to attend school regularly, have higher achievements, and continue their education beyond high school (Henderson & Mapp, 2002; OECD, 2012). Enhancing parental involvement is a major concern of policymakers in education in many countries. For instance, in the United States, the No Child Left Behind Act includes, among its purposes, providing parents meaningful opportunities to participate in the education of their children (US Department of Education, 2001). In the United Kingdom, the Government's White Paper, Higher Standards, Better Schools for All (UK Department for Education and Skills, 2005), seeks to increase parental choice, responsibility, power and involvement. In Chinese Taipei, parental involvement in school affairs is regulated by the Educational Fundamental Act during the period of compulsory education (Taiwan Ministry of Education, 1999). Most European and many Latin American countries now also have formal initiatives to support ties between the school and the family (Miljević-Ridički & Vizek Vidović, 2010; Muñoz Zamora 2011).

However, regardless of widespread advocacy of increased parental involvement in education, strategies that promote it are not always systematically implemented and are not always equally effective across different socie-

¹ Shorter version of the paper was published as an IEA Policy Brief (Mirazchiyski and Klemenčič, 2014). The paper was produced under the World Education Research Association – International Research Network (WERA-IRN): Theory and Practice of Using International Large-scale Students Assessments Datasets for National Evidence-based Policymaking (ILSA-PM).
