

Oil & Gas Disclosures

Oil Reserves

An estimate of reserves and future production contained in the presentation will depend on the assumptions and estimates for reserves from various sources prepared by earth engineering, an independent qualified resource engineer, effective September 30, 2015. Earth Engineering Inc. has not been an oil and gas engineer and geologist as per the Canadian Standard for Professional Engineers' requirements by the Society of Professional Engineers (Engineers Canada) and the Canadian Institute of Mining, Metallurgy & Petroleum (CIM) (Engineers Canada).

It should not be assumed that the present value of estimated future oil reserves presented represents the fair market value of the reserves. There is no assurance that the reserves shown are true reserves and will be obtained and sustained over the lifetime. The reserves and future estimates of the reserves are made on a subjective basis and cannot be compared to other companies' reserves and estimates only, and there is no guarantee that the estimates presented are accurate. Actual results may differ from the estimates presented. There may be a greater flow of cash than the estimates presented above.

All future oil reserves are estimated using historical prices and costs. Future oil reserves may have increased or decreased based on future changes in oil prices and costs. There is no assurance that the estimates presented are accurate.

The estimates of reserves and future production by individual properties may not reflect the same conditions and assumptions of reserves and future production for the company's entire production properties.

Quality of Oil Reserves

Some of the requirements of a well may be increasing permeability, reservoir volume, a high concentration of oil and a low viscosity of the oil. Some reserves may be more difficult to produce, especially at the lower oil and gas prices. There is no assurance that the estimates presented are accurate.
