

Phase Rule

(vii) It finds extensive use in the study of many heterogeneous systems. In particular it has been found extremely useful in the extraction of metals.

Limitations:

- (i) The phase rule is applicable to heterogeneous systems in equilibrium, so, it is therefore of no use for such systems which are slow in attaining the equilibrium state.
- (ii) It is applicable to a single equilibrium state, so it never gives information about the other possible equilibrium in the system.
- (iii) In Gibbs phase rule, various variables are temperature, pressure and composition. It does not take in account the electric and magnetic influences. For consideration of such variables, the factor 2 of the Phase rule has to be adjusted accordingly.
