Sigma Delta A/D Conversion for Signal Conditioning Kathleen Philips,Arthur H.M. van Roermund,2006-05-05 1 1

Background Moore s Law predicts a decrease by a factor of two in the feature size of CMOS te nology every three years and has been valid for years It implies a doubling of the eration speed and a four times higher transistor count per unit of area every three years The combination leads to an eight times higher processing capability per unit of area This on going miniaturization allows the integration of complex electronic systems with millions of transistors Very Large Scale Integration and enables the integration of el tronic systems An electronic system A generic picture of an integrated electronic system is shown in g 1 1 The heart of the system is the signal processing core This core supports a wide variety of functions such as customization and programmability of multiple applications channel coding the de nition of the user interface etc These functions are enabled by DSP a controller CPU and various blocks of memory In advanced ICs these blocks provide almost all signal processing and usually dominate in the overall power and area consumption of integrated systems The huge data rates involved require high speed busses for communication between these blocks A power management unit fuels the system by providing the propriate supply voltages and currents Science Abstracts ,1995 Profile of the Worldwide
