In India, different political parties represent the interests of different caste groups. A majority of Indians prefer political leaders from their own caste, tribe or religion, according to a 2018 study, indicating how identity politics plays a significant role in state and general elections. This was especially so among non-literates across caste and religious groups.

The mainstream media also reports how political parties, manipulate the religious sentiments of the people for their own benefits and to harm the rival or opponent party. This caste based politics can be seen when parties sees the Muslim minorities as vote banks only, and they uses them to rebel against the government in power.
