

PETROLEUM MICROBIOLOGY

Almost every aspects of our life (and the world's economy) depend on petroleum. As of 2018, there are nearly 1.5×10^{12} barrels of oil reserves across the globe (excluding those buried in the Canadian oil sands). The total world-wide production of oil has more than tripled, from 21 million barrels per day in 1960 to nearly 76 million barrels per day in 2018. The drastic increase in petroleum production has been met with growing concerns regarding its negative impact on the environment.

This project will discuss biogeochemical properties of petroleum, including its geological formation and chemical composition. It will then emphasize on biological production of methane (known as methanogenesis) from the oil reservoirs and its impact on the environment.
