A. Lewis,J. E. Rasmussen,J. R. Stahmann,1965 A nearly vertical antenna wire varying in length from 3000 to 8000 ft was shock excited by a high voltage source The resulting radiation fields were received at distances of about 600 km by two stations separated laterally so as to subtend an angle of about 15 at the source The difference in wavefront arrival times at the two stations observed for 101 transmissions showed an average absolute deviation from the mean of about only 1 2 μ s This figure includes the effects of possible source asymmetries sferics noise instrumental errors and wave propagation Typical oscillograms of antenna currents and radiation fields are given It is shown that the amplitudes and durations of the pulse envelopes the amplitudes and durations of the first half cycles and the quasi frequencies of the pulses are in good agreement with a theory that takes energy losses into account
