The New Patricians R. Paterson, 1998-05-27 This book expounds values which the author styles patrician It is also a critique of distinctively plebeian attitudes These two terms refer to beliefs and responses which any individual may evince regardless of social class The main issues in life are within our own consciousness not in the external world Our experiences are fraught with symbolisms noble and ignoble which our free imagination can reveal and our choices select in our endeavours to create a successful human identity

The New Patricians Ronald William Keith Paterson, 1998 This book expounds a set of values that the author styles patrician It is simultaneously a critique of plebeian attitudes to life The figures of the patrician and the plebeian do not represent different social classes but are rather personifications of sharply contrasting beliefs and responses that any individual may evince Dr Paterson argues that the main issues we face are within our own consciousness and are to be resolved by transforming our self images rather than by changing the external world Our experiences are not mere brute occurrences but are pregnant with symbolism which we can construe to reveal hope opportunity and purposiveness or meaninglessness sterility and disenchantment This we do through our feelings and emotions but above all through the quality and intensity of our imagination

England: An Elegy Roger Scruton, 2006-05-10 Provides an account of England which is an analysis of its institutions and culture and a celebration of its virtues This book covers aspects of the English inheritance informed by a philosophical vision It shows that there is such a country as England that it has a distinct personality and endows its residents with a distinct moral ideal

The Philosophical Review, 1999 Current Contents, April 12, 1999, 1999

Writer's Guide to Book Editors, Publishers and Literary Agents, 2002-2003 Jeff Herman, 2001-07-10 This one of a kind reference provides critical information on securing publishing contracts

Trade and Trade-offs M. Estellie Smith, 2000 What do globalization the abortion debate and the decision one makes about what to do about dinner have in common This and other questions that arise from the necessity of individuals and groups to deal with the who what where when and how of production distribution and consumption are addressed in this provocative and witty publication Street wise and jaded undergraduates will end up taking a fresh look at their everyday lives and the larger world they will someday manage Casting aside the idea that economic deals only with things that can be measured with money Smith encourages people to think not just about dollars but also about sense The emphasis is on the sociocultural costs and benefits involved in making choices Readers are challenged to rethink many of the usual ways of understanding such everyday concepts as property capital poverty and affluence distribution and exchange power and authority rights and privileges versus duties and responsibilities and even such issues as surplus and waste Thoughtful people everywhere are asking whether future generations will bask in the sun of such technological innovations as the Internet cloning and genetic modification and medical breakthroughs or live in the shadows cast by these same changes One of the most important themes addressed is a range of ethical questions not the least of
