The New Men Brian Murphy, 1997-09-01 In the shadow of the Vatican stands the Pontifical North American College a seminary that trains America's elite priests Its Rector is so close to the Pope that he helps distribute communion at Midnight Mass on Christmas Eve Following the lives of six men through their first year at the North American College journalist Brian Murphy allows us to view their spiritual transformations The New Men shows us how these men are shaped into the priests chosen to lead American Catholic life in the next century Six men six lives turned toward the priesthood a top gun pilot a farm boy from North Dakota a New Orleans high living lawyer a Vietnamese immigrant who survived the fall of Saigon and identical twins who graduated from Harvard and took very different paths to Rome Their journeys begin as they walk into St Peter's dressed in clerics for the first time They listen as we do to Father Dolan their Rector and mentor preach about faith and about chastity We feel their struggles to find holiness and shed their worldly lives The very qualities that made these men successful are now their torments as they grapple with pride with sex and with leaving their world behind By the end of the year they are truly New Men clearer in their vision transformed by prayer ready for what comes next or at least most of them are We do not know what their roles will be but their slow and difficult inner transformation is the miracle of The New Men a book that shines a warm and loving light on the lives of young would be priests The New Men Brian
