

FUSION II (200 ROCKWELL) II

Specifications

Two-stage rocket-fueled
Length: 50ft (15m) (w/ fuel)
Span: 31ft (9.4m)

Launch weight: 20,000 lb (9,070 kg)
Max speed: 3,000 mph (4,828 km/h)
Endurance: 30 minutes

Top speed: 3,000 mph (4,828 km/h)

Notes: The fuselage II, as the named version of the II-flying launch was known, was little more than a factory (though prototype) test fly.

airframe, complete for the II-f with which it shared its powerplant. The design's intention by the RLM was the small single-motors, but after some formal testing, Loeblich concluded that Piesl would only require fuel and, ultimately, more space fuel. Thus, the DFB 104, its successor, acquired a single, centre fin and nozzle. Using as its fuel 11.5-lit (per 40 per cent aqueous solution of hydrogen peroxide plus oxygenine as a stabiliser) and 2-lit (per aqueous solution of sodium and potassium permanganate) to promote decomposition), the Walter R 1020 motor was to propel the prototype at speeds of up to 1000km/h (610mph). It was clear from the outset that this was a major achievement and Loeblich was ordered to Messerschmitt's Augsburg research centre with his research and development team in January 1935.

Thus the DFB 104 metamorphosed into the Messerschmitt Me 163 'Komet'.

The Me 163 'Komet'

The 'Komet', which provided the projected Me 163 was similar to a little over two months, was a radical and adventurous approach to the problem of how to defeat the heavily armed and protected bomber aircraft which was flown in formations designed to create an impenetrable defence line. Its designation, all of them were decided by the RLM, is somewhat misleading. As Messerschmitt AG actually had little to do with its development, which remained in the hands of its creator, in the spring of 1931, the prototype of the new aircraft began gliding tests, flown to a height of 30,000 ft (9,144m). It was soon achieving speeds of up to 800km/h (500mph) while retaining a high degree of controllability, and during the summer it was sent to the rocket development establishment at Peenemünde where on the Baltic coast, to be fitted with a rocket motor – an improved model of the Walter R1 incorporating a degree of thrust control but retaining 11.5-lit and 2-lit as its fuel.

The development programme at Peenemünde was fraught with accidents, some fatal, as time after time the volatile fuels spontaneously exploded. On one occasion, an entire building was demolished; moreover, it also resulted in the Me 163 V1 breaking the world speed record repeatedly until the test pilot, Hans Ottmar, finally exceeded 1000km/h (610mph), almost being killed in the process when the aircraft became suddenly uncontrollable as compression shock waves caused by airflow over the wing surface locally exceeding the speed of sound induced negative lift and massive vibration. In the event, Ottmar managed to regain control and land successfully. The RLM impressed, ordered prototypes of an operational aircraft, the Me 163, to be armed with a pair of MG 151 20mm (0.78in) cannon and powered by a more powerful R109-42 rocket motor using the compressed but unpredictable combination of 11.5-lit and 2-lit (20 per cent aqueous solution, 87 per cent methane, 11 per cent water as its fuel and producing 1000kg (2200lb) of thrust. Around 2,000 tonnes (2 tons) of propellant very nearly had the entire weight of the aircraft was enough to take it to its operational ceiling of 13,100m (43,000ft) in 1.35 minutes, and the pilot then had a further four and a half minutes of powered flight available; thus, he would actually have been gliding, unpowered, during most of his mission.

Two Me 163s had been handed over to a special Luftwaffe unit early in 1942 to allow pilot formation to begin, though it was long before training actually commenced. The high landing speed of the 'Komet' (around 200km/h (120mph) combined with the fact that the pilot was committed to a slow turn, leaving no power available to slow him to regain height for a second attempt, resulted in many accidents, most of them fatal. The first operational unit, equipped with Me 163s, was armed, with a pair of 20mm (0.78in) cannon in the wing roots and a considerable degree of armour protection for the pilot, began forming at Wehrmacht in May 1944, and the first went into action as a DFB 104 on 16 August. It proved to find success some days later, when Luftwaffe Major had downed a B-17 near Leipzig. In all, some 200 Me 163s in various versions were constructed and eight by 4 were sold to Japan, where two powered and over 50 powered versions were built before the war's end, but the aircraft was only a very limited success, according to its followers. For little more than 10 American B-17s. An improved version, known originally as the Ju 163, was produced at Jukos and then taken over by Messerschmitt as the Me 263. It was somewhat larger, had a wheel undercarriage rather than skids, and was powered by a Walter R109C motor. It was produced in prototype form only.

The Selbstvernichtungsflieger

In fact, like the Me 163, the 'Komet' was too little, too late. Its development was the subject in Germany by the summer of 1941 that individual fighter pilots had been to Germany, Adolf Hitler, and until such as the R109 and R109C were formed as Sturmgeschütz (assault) groups with that as an accepted role back to the using the 100m (330ft) that with frontal attack. They had a measure of success between 1 July 1944 and the end of March 1945, when they ceased to operate. They accounted for around 200 Allied bombers, but only 10 of them by morning. In April 1945, Sturmgeschütz 130 was formed from volunteers, they trained for 10 days in training tactics, and then went into action, in all, they trained and downed eight, but at a high cost in themselves, a total of 11 of 100s and 100s. It was potentially self-sufficient Selbstvernichtungsflieger was to be employed, then clearly a much less sophisticated aircraft, using the in the way of strategy, instead, about the employment of some of the best pilot-trained fighters of the entire period.

At the point we need to take a very short detour to consider the nature of Selbstvernichtungsflieger, it was clear the stated intention to require it over all others to control suitable in Germany in the way that it was in Japan, and great pains were taken to maintain that the very design was actually the case. The Selbstvernichtungsflieger were expected only to employ their aircraft as weapons in the last resort (though mostly to the Sturmgeschütz were required to take on both that they would indeed do this if necessary, and to make every effort to ensure that the attack off them with the possibility of escape. As all of the initial effort (including the R109C) 100s,

The Secret War for the Middle East Youssef Aboul-Enein,2013-10-15 It can be argued that the Middle East during the World War II has been regarded as that conflict's most overlooked theater of operations Though the threat of direct Axis invasion never materialized beyond the Egyptian Western Desert with Rommel's Afrika Korps this did not limit the Axis from probing the Middle East and cultivating potential collaborators and sympathizers These actions left an indelible mark in the socio political evolution of the modern states of the Middle East This book explores the infusion of the political language of anti-Semitism nationalism fascism and Marxism that were among the ideological byproducts of Axis and Allied intervention in the Arab world The status of British dominated Middle East was tailor made for exploitation by Axis intelligence and propaganda German and Italian intelligence efforts fueled anti British resentments their influence shaped the course of Arab nationalist sentiments throughout the Middle East A relevant parallel to the pan Arab cause was Hitler's attempt to bring ethnic Germans into the fold of a greater German state In theory as the Sudeten German stood on par with the Carpathian German so too according to doctrinal theory did the Yemeni stand in union with the Syrian in the imagination of those espousing pan Arabism As historic evidence demonstrates this very commonality proved to be a major factor in the development of relations between Arab and Fascist leaders The Arab nationalist movement amounted to nothing more than a shapeless fragmented counter position to British imperialism imported to the Arab East via Berlin for Nazi aspirations
