

Blood and Blood Products

Standard 7

FACTSHEET

Clinical leaders and senior managers of a health service organisation implement systems to ensure the safe, appropriate, efficient and effective use of blood and blood products. Clinicians and other members of the workforce use the blood and blood product safety systems.

Australia has one of the safest blood supplies in the world. There are comprehensive national regulations that cover all aspects of blood donation and processing of blood and blood products. Blood products are stored and delivered to health services under regulated conditions, and are carefully stored and managed within health services and laboratories.

However, the transfusion of blood and blood products is not without risk and can lead to complications and adverse outcomes for patients. Blood and blood products should only be given when clearly indicated and the expected benefits to the patient are likely to outweigh the potential hazards.

The main areas that jeopardise safe transfusion are: the blood sample for cross matching is taken from the wrong patient; the wrong name is written on the blood sample tube; the patient did not need the transfusion; and bedside verification is not done correctly to ensure that the right blood product is being given to the right patient at the right time and in the correct manner.¹
