

CHAPTER 2

CHARACTERISTIC ELEMENTS IN THE HANDWRITING OF DEVIANTS

Deviations appear as follows:

1. Leftward swinging lower lengths, a sign of incomplete detachment from the mother in the pre-Oedipal phase.
2. Irregular, crippled middle zone, indicating poor self-confidence and weak body-ego.
3. Weakness of the stroke picture, revealing a weak ego and weak body-ego.
4. Weak, crippled I-pronoun, disclosing a small ego-image.
5. Triangular, sharp-cut lower loops, demonstrating great irritability.
6. Long, shaky, loosely hanging lower loops, demonstrating a weak libido. The writer does not have sufficient energy to complete a round loop which crosses the baseline.
7. Ambivalent writing, where staggering slant tips both leftward and rightward in the same script. Ambivalent handwriting, when combined with an extremely weak middle zone, is an even stronger indication of deviation.
8. Rightward-slanted counterstrokes in the lower extensions, which include both looped and unlooped structures, establishing the writer's rebellion against society's acceptable modes of fulfilling sexual instincts.
9. Crippled lower loop construction, indicating disturbance in the libido.
10. Circled i-dots, signs of narcissistic residue from the phallic-narcissistic phase.
11. The I-pronoun, when either the upper or lower part resembles a phallus, revealing complete regression into the phallic-narcissistic phase.
12. The enrolled I-pronoun, embryonic forms indicating regression to the oral phase and longing for return to the early union with the mother.
13. Extreme narrowness, sharpness, rigidity and pedantic order of the script arrangement, showing residual sadistic impulses from the oral and anal phases, sometimes depicting a fully developed anal-sadistic character.
