

Martha Stark offers Three Modes of Therapeutic Action:

- Enhancement of knowledge
- Provision of experience
- Engagement in relationship

“...if the therapist is to be optimally effective, then she must be able to work comfortably within all three models of therapeutic action – sometimes first using one approach, and then another, sometimes using two or three approaches simultaneously.” (p. xxiii)

The most effective listening stance is an optimal balance between:

- A neutral object
- An empathic self object
- An authentic subject

(p.4)

Where do you find your inner therapist lands in the therapy room? Where are you most comfortable? What have you experienced in your own therapy?
