Ellis, 2012-12-06 Littoral gastropods of the families Littorinidae and Muricidae are well studied compared to most marine taxa yet there remain many basic problems concerning their taxonomy ecology and evolutionary biology In other words we know these snails well enough to realize just how little we really know about them This awareness prompted the First European Meeting on Littorinid Biology held at the British Museum in London on 26th November 1986 and the discussion continued through the Second Meeting on Littorinid Biology held at the Tjarno Marine Biological Laboratory Sweden from 4th to 8th July 1988 During the Tjarno meeting it was agreed to have a third meeting at Dale Pembroke shire U K in 1990 Twenty two people attended the Tjarno meeting and a further ten contributed as co authors to the papers that were presented These covered research in progress in a broad range of topics and geo graphical areas Unfortunately Cesare Sacchi and Domenico Voltolina as well as Elisabeth Boulding were not able to attend the meeting in person but their contributions were ably presented by David Reid and Richard Palmer respectively We also regret that one of us C E and several of our Russian colleagues did not have the opportunity to come      International Catalogue of Scientific Literature cold seep ecosystems the rediscovery of cold water coral ecosystems with high technology instrumentation is currently another hot topic in multidisciplinary marine research Conventionally coral reefs are regarded as restricted to warm and well illuminated tropical seas not associated with cold and dark waters of higher latitudes However ongoing scientific missions have shed light on the global significance of this overlooked ecosystem Cold water coral ecosystems are involved in the formation of large seabed structures such as reefs and giant carbonate mounds and they represent unexploited paleo environmental archives of earth history Like their tropical cousins cold water coral ecosystems harbour rich species diversity Despite the great water depths commercial interests overlap more and more with the coral occurrences Human activities already impinge directly on cold water coral reefs causing severe damage to this vulnerable ecosystem In this volume the current key institutions involved in cold water coral research have contributed 62 state of the art articles from geology and oceanography to biology and conservation
