Policy Making In Israel Routines For Si:

Change, Transformation and Development J. Stan Metcalfe, Uwe Cantner, 2012-12-06 For as long as one can remember the edifice of the neoclassical economic synthesis has been under attack Critiques have focused on the extreme unreality of the assumptions that underpin the Arrow Debreu theorems of welfare economics They have queried the excessive formalism of the edifice and the lack of practical significance of many of the results They have castigated the neoclassical synthesis for its internal incoherence lacking an independent theory of capital for example one of the favorite topics of the Cambridge school its lack of a dynamic element its non evolutionary character its lack of any conception of market process and so the list could be continued Blaug 1997 Through all this the neoclassical synthesis remains as strong as ever impervious it seems to these or any other attacks In this paper a different tack is taken The neoclassical edifice is left alone standing as a representation of what goes on in a certain kind of economy namely the economy where goods and services are produced and exchanged The paper then introduces another kind of economy namely an economy of productive entities called resources that are needed to produce the economy of goods and services Professional Journal of the United States Army, 2008 State, Foreign Operations, and Related Programs Appropriations for 2015 United States Congress. House. Committee on Appropriations. Subcommittee on State, Foreign Operations, and Related Programs, 2014 Green Neighbourhoods and Eco-gentrification Elise Machline, David Pearlmutter, Moshe Schwartz, Pierre Pech, 2020-04-25 This SpringerBrief brings together a series of studies that delve into the details of French and Israeli green building practices and tell a tale of two countries which deviates considerably from what first impressions might suggest In depth data analysis interviews with stakeholders and on the ground documentation are used to paint a portrait of green neighborhoods in both large and small cities and to shed light on the diversity of outcomes and the intricate web of interests leading to each one In the Israeli cases these dynamics reflect the fact that the private sector has become increasingly dominant in the residential building field following a decades long process in which the welfare state has shrunk and the government has distanced itself from large social programs The French solution to this dilemma is to mandate the inclusion of subsidized housing within its ecoquartiers with the declared aim of promoting a diverse social mix of population Green building has yet to prove itself as a solution for the masses The sale price of an apartment in a certified green building is significantly higher than what would be justified by either the additional construction costs required to build it or the energy and water saving potential that can be realized by using it The tale of two countries presented here suggests that neither the mechanisms of the market nor the proclamations of a welfare state can easily overcome this dilemma What is needed is a new type of thinking which can only emerge once the concept of value reflects not only the realities of a free market economy but also those of a planet which turns out to be distinctly limited in its resources Comprehensive Planning in Israel Makhon le-tikhnun u-fituah (Israel), 1968 1968 Annual Supplement John B.
