

of this kind, as its editor readily admits, is that of focus and integration. Contributions, for example, are to be found here to such broad subject areas as the cultural hurdles to development and to such specifics as O and M improvement in India and Pakistan.

Several of the papers make notable "ideal" contributions, which, if for no other reason, justifies their being shared beyond the ivy of any particular university. Two of the most thoughtful chapters are clearly those of Pye, with his concern for broadening the base of development to include the "non-bureaucratic components" of the society, and Meadows, a sociologist, who sees development administration as essentially "an act of imagination which attracts, fires, holds, and elaborates the loyalties of human beings engaged in goal-directed change." Bharati makes a useful contribution also by calling attention to the "multiple configuration expectancy principles" which explain how local people view the change agent who has come among them. Finally, Swerdlow himself should be mentioned for some rather pointed comments on the "mis-identities" which have too often fuzed the idea of national development with economic growth.—DAVID S. BROWN, The George Washington University.

Explosive Forces in Latin America. JOHN J. TE-PASKE AND SYDNEY N. FISHER, EDS. (Columbus: Ohio State University Press, 1964. Pp. 196. $4.75.)

This is a collection of essays, prepared for a 1962 conference of the Graduate Institute for World Affairs of the Ohio State University. Like most collections of this sort, it is uneven, and the essays do not really develop any consistent argument or explore any well-defined problem. However, this particular book does have a unique quality, for it is something of a "sampler" of the thought of some of the more stimulating and well-known students of contemporary Latin America.

Herein, Oscar Lewis provides a sensitive and introspective summary of his approach to the sub-culture of poverty. Extensive quotations from The Children of Sanchez illustrate his technique of letting an impoverished Mexican family develop and describe its own world view. Edwin Lieuwijn's essay on the political role of the military contains the core of his argument in Arms and Politics in Latin America. John J. Kennedy presents a capsule version of his more extended discussion of the role of the Church. Thomas Carroll reiterates his message of the explosive threat of agrarian revolution in Latin America, and the imperative need for land reform.

David Burks presents an essay based on his continuing interest in Soviet influence in Cuba. George Blanksten's paper on the Alliance for Progress hints at some of the questions of the political consequences of economic development that are the author's current research concern. John Harrison provides a somewhat distinctive interpretation of the role of the intellectual and the university. Arnold Schaefer contributes an interesting study of nutritional problems in Latin America.

For those who have followed the work of the authors included here, nothing that is said will come as any great surprise. The best of these papers are essentially synopses of ideas and approaches more fully developed elsewhere. However, as a collection, they provide an interesting commentary on the state of Latin American social science scholarship in the United States. One notes the characteristic interdisciplinary quality of the effort. Economists, anthropologists, political scientists, and historians address themselves to similar problems, within a similar frame of reference. One observes the heterogeneity of moods within which current commentary on the problems of change in Latin America is cast, from Carroll's almost impassioned militancy to the objective detachment of Kennedy. And although much has been said in recent years about the paucity of academic talent devoted to the analysis of Latin American problems, this book reveals the presence of at least a few star performers, and a number of craftsmen of considerable ability.—CHARLES W. ANDERSON, The University of Wisconsin.

Political Modernization in Japan and Turkey (Studies in Political Development 3). EDITED BY ROBERT E. WARD AND DANKWART A. RUSTOW. (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1964. Pp. viii, 502. $8.75.)

The Comparative Politics Committee of the S.S.R.C. herewith produces the third of its seven projected volumes on different aspects of political development. It is the only one to apply the case method rather than a strictly functional approach. Japan and Turkey, two Asian states with widely varying backgrounds and rates of modernization, were both late-developing polities whose past experiences may provide lessons to the host of developing states today.

The seventeen experts on Japan and Turkey whose papers at a 1962 conference make up the bulk of this work examine in turn eight aspects in each nation's development. The result is an extremely provocative comparison of Asia's most advanced state with one of the least advanced. It should be valuable to all students of comparative modernization, and to those specialists concerned with the two nations covered. Like most products of foundation collaboration, Political Modernization of Japan and Turkey suffers from
