Investigative Strategies for Lead-Source Attribution at Superfund Sites Associated with Mining Activities National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine, Division on Earth and Life Studies, Board on Environmental Studies and Toxicology, Committee on Sources of Lead Contamination at or near Superfund Sites, 2017-10-31 The Superfund program of the US Environmental Protection Agency EPA was created in the 1980s to address human health and environmental risks posed by abandoned or uncontrolled hazardous waste sites Identification of Superfund sites and their remediation is an expensive multistep process As part of this process EPA attempts to identify parties that are responsible for the contamination and thus financially responsible for remediation Identification of potentially responsible parties is complicated because Superfund sites can have a long history of use and involve contaminants that can have many sources Such is often the case for mining sites that involve metal contamination metals occur naturally in the environment they can be contaminants in the wastes generated at or released from the sites and they can be used in consumer products which can degrade and release the metals back to the environment This report examines the extent to which various sources contribute to environmental lead contamination at Superfund sites that are near lead mining areas and focuses on sources that contribute to lead contamination at sites near the Southeast Missouri Lead Mining District It recommends potential improvements in approaches used for assessing sources of lead contamination at or near Superfund sites

Using Graywater and Stormwater to Enhance Local Water Supplies National Academies of Sciences,

Engineering, and Medicine, Division on Earth and Life Studies, Water Science and Technology Board, Committee on the Beneficial Use of Graywater and Stormwater: An Assessment of Risks, Costs, and Benefits, 2016-06-30

Chronic and episodic water shortages are becoming common in many regions of the United States and population growth in water scarce regions further compounds the challenges. Increasingly alternative water sources such as graywater (untreated wastewater that does not include water from the toilet but generally includes water from bathroom sinks, showers, bathtubs, clothes washers, and laundry sinks) and stormwater (water from rainfall or snow that can be measured downstream in a pipe, culvert, or stream shortly after the precipitation event) are being viewed as resources to supplement scarce water supplies rather than as waste to be discharged as rapidly as possible. Graywater and stormwater can serve a range of non-potable uses including irrigation, toilet flushing, washing, and cooling, although treatment may be needed. Stormwater may also be used to recharge groundwater which may ultimately be tapped for potable use. In addition to providing additional sources of local water supply, harvesting stormwater has many potential benefits including energy savings, pollution prevention, and reducing the impacts of urban development on urban streams. Similarly, the reuse of graywater can enhance water supply reliability and extend the capacity of existing wastewater systems in growing cities. Despite the benefits of using local alternative water sources to address water demands, many questions remain that have limited the broader application of graywater and stormwater capture and use. In particular, limited information is available on the costs, benefits, and risks of these projects, and beyond the simplest applications, many state and local public health agencies have not developed regulatory frameworks for full use of these local water resources. To address these issues, Using Graywater and Stormwater to Enhance Local Water Supplies analyzes the risks, costs, and benefits on various uses of graywater and stormwater. This report examines technical, economic, regulatory, and social issues associated with graywater and stormwater capture for a range of uses including non-potable urban uses, irrigation, and groundwater recharge. Using Graywater and Stormwater to Enhance Local Water Supplies considers the quality and suitability of water for reuse, treatment and storage technologies, and human health and environmental risks of water reuse. The findings and recommendations of this report will be valuable for water managers, citizens of states under a current drought, and local and state health and environmental agencies.
