Resolving Development Disputes Through Negotiation:

Resolving Development Disputes Through Negotiations Timothy J. Sullivan, 2012-12-06 In the last decade disputes between developers and local communities over proposed construction projects have led to increasing litigation. Environmental legislation in particular has greatly enhanced the rights and powers of organized groups that desire to participate in local development decisions. These powers have allowed citizen groups to block undesired and socially unacceptable projects such as highways through urban areas and sprawling suburban developments. At the same time these powers have produced a collective inability to construct many needed projects that produce adverse local impacts. Prisons, airports, hospitals, waste treatment plants, and energy facilities all face years of litigation before a final decision. At times prolonged litigation has produced especially high costs to all participants. Despite these new powers, citizen action has often been limited to participation in public hearings or adjudicatory proceedings. Typically this occurs so late in the decision process that citizen input has very little effect in shaping a project's design. Those who dislike some element of a project often have little choice other than to oppose the entire project through litigation.

Multi-Party Dispute Resolution, Democracy and Decision-Making Carrie Menkel-Meadow, 2017-05-15 The articles selected for this volume draw on game theory, political science, psychology, sociology, and anthropology to consider how the process of dispute resolution is altered, challenged, and made more complex by the presence of multiple parties and/or multiple issues. The volume explores issues of coalition formation, defection, collaboration, commitments, voting practices, and joint decision making in settings of increasing human complexity. Also included are examples of concrete uses of deliberative democracy processes taken from new applications of complex dispute resolution theory and practice. The selected essays represent the latest theoretical advances and challenges in the field and demonstrate attempts to use dispute resolution theory in a wide variety of settings such as political decision making and policy formation, regulatory matters, environmental disputes, healthcare, community disputes, constitutional formation, and in many other controversial issues in the polity.

Environmental Dispute Resolution Lawrence S. Bacow, Michael Wheeler, 2013-06-29 This book has its origins in an MIT research project that was funded by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). Our immediate objective was to prepare a set of case studies that examined bargaining and negotiation as they occurred between government environmental advocates and regulatees throughout the traditional regulatory process. The project was part of a larger effort by the EPA to make environmental regulation more efficient and less litigious. The principal investigator for the research effort was Lawrence Suskind of the Department of Urban Studies and Planning. Eight case studies were prepared under the joint supervision of Suskind and the authors of this book. Studying the negotiating behavior of parties as we worked our way through an environmental dispute proved enlightening. We observed missed opportunities for settlement, negotiating tactics that backfired, and strategies that appeared to be grounded more in intuition than in thoughtful analysis. At the same time, however, we were struck by how often the parties ultimately managed to muddle through People negotiated not out of some idealistic commitment to consensus but because they thought it better served their own interests When some negotiations reached an impasse people improvised mediation These disputants succeeded in spite of legal and institutional barriers even though few of them had a sophisticated understanding of negotiation
