Percept Decision Action No 270 Bridging The Gaps:

Percept, Decision, Action Derek J. Chadwick, Matthew Diamond, Jamie A. Goode, 2006-05-12 Seemingly simple behaviours turn out on reflection to be discouragingly complex For many years cognitive operations such as sensation perception comparing percepts to stored models short term and long term memory decision making and planning of actions were treated by most neuroscientists as separate areas of research This was not because the neuroscience community believed these operations to act independently it is intuitive that any common cognitive process seamlessly interweaves these operations but because too little was known about the individual processes constituting the full behaviour and experimental paradigms and data collection methods were not sufficiently well developed to put the processes in sequence in any controlled manner These limitations are now being overcome in the leading cognitive neuroscience laboratories and this book is a timely summary of the current state of the art The theme of the book is how the brain uses sensory information to develop and decide upon the appropriate action and how the brain determines the appropriate action to optimize the collection of new sensory information It addresses several key questions How are percepts built up in the cortex and how are judgments of the percept made In what way does information flow within and between cortical regions and what is accomplished by successive and reverberating stages of processing How are decisions made about the percept subsequently acted upon through their conversion to a response according to the learned criterion for action How does the predicted or expected sensation interact with the actual incoming flow of sensory signals The chapters and discussions in the book reveal how answering these questions requires an understanding of sensory motor loops our perception of the world drives new actions and the actions undertaken at any moment lead to a new view of the world This book is a fascinating read for all clinical and experimental psychologists and neuroscientists as well as anyone interested in how we perceive the world and act within it Nature Sir Norman Lockyer, 2004

Normal Variation and Changes in Neocortical Organization Following Early Visual Loss in Monodelphis Domestica Sarah Jean Karlen, 2008 The British National Bibliography Arthur James Wells, 2006 Genome Research, 2008 American Book Publishing Record, 2006 Macro cognition: The Science and Engineering of Sociotechnical Work Systems Paul Ward, Robert R. Hoffman, Gareth E. Conway, Jan Maarten Schraagen, David Peebles, Robert J. B. Hutton, Erich J. Petushek, 2018-02-28 The increasing complexity of work systems and changes in the nature of workplace technology over the past century have resulted in an exponential shift in the nature of work activities from physical labor to cognitive work Modern work systems have many characteristics that make them cognitively complex They can be highly interactive comprised of multiple agents and artifacts information may be limited and distributed across space and time task goals are frequently ill defined conflicting dynamic and emergent planning may only be possible at general levels of abstraction or require adaptive solutions some degree of proficiency or expertise is required the stakes are often high and uncertainty time constraints and stress are seldom absent To complicate matters further cognition in complex work settings is typically constrained by broader professional organizational and institutional practice and policy These features of cognitive work present significant challenges to scientific methodology and theory and subsequent design of reliable interventions Historically philosophers and scientists have attempted to understand the mental activities experienced during cognitive work at multiple levels of analysis using divergent methods Some have examined cognition at an associative contextual functional or holistic level relying on naturalistic methods to understand the higher mental processes as they work in harmony during goal directed behavior Others have embraced experimental methods and favored internal over external validity often reducing cognition to a psychology of fundamental acts such as short term memory access with millisecond shifts in attention More recently Macro cognition has evolved as a complementary paradigm Macro cognitive researchers have studied the cognitive functions and processes associated with skilled adaptive collaborative and resilient cognitive work in the context of the aforementioned complexities of psychotechnical and sociotechnical work systems Typically this research has been carried out using cognitive task analytic techniques that draw on both naturalistic and quasi experimental methods The primary goals of research in Macro cognition are to better understand cognitive adaptations to complexity to increase our theoretical understanding of the organism environment relations by studying the mapping between cognitive work and real world demands and to promote use inspired research capable of improving system performance
