

Did the Minister propose to introduce the unknown book of bongs into what, prior to its invasion by Irish reaction and Swedish imperialism, had been a remarkably bongoless province?

I tell you, Mike, Christopher had revised his policy even before DeLauriers had set down. With the sort of pointed warning that bongs were to a public relations man's eye, he declared: "The Government will never let an solemn obligation under the United Nations Charter stand in the way of a conscientious refusal to aid and abet the degeneration of bongs into bongs, nor its consequent adherence to a policy of finally reviewing the reconsideration of its reconsidered decision to the light of the latest information available from informed bongholders."

Oh, he was magnificent (said Mr. Sincerely). His policy was vibrating like a well-tuned G-string. When Simon Steen-mander (Conservative, Birmingham) rose to ask why on earth the U.N. wanted bongs into in the first place, when they were supposed to have no money to play with, Christopher took the House into his confidence and said that frankly he had been deeply suspicious of the whole idea from the beginning, and had always personally favoured the idea of bongs as being more suitable for the Congo. Frankly, Mike, he made his critics look like bongling fools.

Michael Frayn

BEST FROM THE WEST

Mike, old boy (said Rollo Sincerely, the well-known public relations specialist), you gave us quite a nice little spread over that bongo debate, and frankly I should like to do something for you in return. Have you ordered, by the way? They do an awfully good tomatoe here, you know.

The point is, Mike, I've got a story that's rather up your street. I'll be putting it out to everyone to-morrow, but I thought you might like to have it today—for old times' sake, and strictly off the record, of course. You remember I lent the personal account for Christopher Trenchard, the Minister of Clavier and Spoc? Well, he's going over to Berlin next Friday to visit the Wall.

Oh no, old boy, he's not the last—I don't think the Minister of Ag and Puh has gone yet. Anyway, here's his programme:
