1. A profit sharing bonus plan requires an entity to pay 10% of its income for the year to employees who serve throughout the current year and who will continue to serve throughout the following year. The entity reported income of P90, 000, 000 for 2013. The entity expects to save 10% of the maximum possible bonus payment through staff turnover. The bonus will be paid on December 31, 2014. How much is the amount paid to the employees in 2014 assuming the estimating savings is correct?

2. On January 1, 2015, an entity announced its decision to close its factory located in Maguindanao and terminate all 200 employees as a result of economic downturn. The entity shall pay P20, 000 per employee upon termination. However, to ensure that the windup of the factory occurs smoothly and all remaining customer orders are completed, the entity needs to retain at least 20% of employees until closure of the factory in eight months. As a result, the entity announced that all employees who agree to stay until the closing of the factory shall receive P60, 000 payment at the end of eight months in addition to receiving their current wage throughout the period of closure instead of the P20, 000. Based on the offer, the entity expects to retain 50 employees until the factory is closed. Out of the total benefits under termination plan, how much is attributable to termination benefit and short-term benefit respectively? _____

3. On September 1, 2012, Howe Company offered special termination benefits to employees who had reached the early retirement stage specified in the entity's pension plan. The termination benefits consisted of lump sum and periodic future payments.

Additionally, the employees accepting the entity offer receive the usual early retirement pension benefits. The offer expired on November 30, 2012. Actual or reasonably estimated amounts on December 31, 2012 relating to the employees accepting the offer are as follows:

Lump sum payments made on January 1, 2013	475,000
PV of periodic payments of P60,000 annually for 3 years (which will begin January 1, 2014)	155,000
Reduction of accrued pension cost on December 31, 2012 for the	45,000
