Laboring Below the Line Frank Munger, 2002-04-25 As the distribution of wealth between rich and poor in the United States grew more and more unequal over the past twenty years this economic gap assumed a life of its own in the popular culture The news and entertainment media increasingly portrayed the lives of the poor with such stereotypes as the lazy welfare mother and the thuggish teen offering Americans few ways to learn how the other half really lives Laboring Below the Line works to bridge this gap by synthesizing a wide range of qualitative scholarship on the working poor The result is a coherent nuanced portrait of how life is lived below the poverty line and a compelling analysis of the systemic forces in which poverty is embedded and through which it is perpetuated Laboring Below the Line explores the role of interpretive research in understanding the causes and effects of poverty Drawing on perspectives of the working poor welfare recipients and marginally employed men and women the contributors an interdisciplinary roster of ethnographers oral historians qualitative sociologists and narrative analysts dissect the life circumstances that affect the personal outlook ability to work and expectations for the future of these people For example Carol Stack views the work aspirations of an Oakland teenager for whom a job is important even though it strains her academic performance And Ruth Buchanan looks at low wage telemarketing workers who are attempting to move up the economic ladder while balancing family education and other important commitments What emerges is a compelling picture of low wage workers one that illustrates the precarious circumstances of individuals struggling with the economic conditions and institutions that surround them Each chapter also explores the capacity for economic survival from a different angle with ancillary commentary complementing the ethnographies with perspectives from other fields of study such as economics At this moment of governmental retrenchment ethnography's complex nonstereotypical portraits of individual people fighting against poverty are especially important Laboring Below the Line reveals the ambiguities of real lives the potential for individuals to change in unexpected ways and the even greater intricacy of the collective life of a community

The Equitable Forest Carol J. Pierce Colfer, 2010-09-30 While there continues to be refinement in defining and assessing sustainable management there remains the urgent need for policies that create the conditions that support sustainability and can halt or slow destructive practices already underway Carol Colfer and her contributors maintain that standardized solutions to forest problems from afar have failed to address both human and environmental needs. Such approaches they argue often neglect the knowledge that local stakeholders have accumulated over generations as forest managers and do not address issues involving the diversity and well being of groups within communities. The contributors note that these problems persist despite clear evidence that equity and social relationships including gender roles are important factors in the ways that communities adapt to change and manage forest resources overall. The Equitable Forest offers an alternative to traditional externally organized strategies for forest management. Termed adaptive collaborative management (ACM), the approach tries to better acknowledge the diversity, complexity and unpredictability of human and natural systems. ACM works to strengthen local institutions and use the knowledge and capacity of groups in local communities to enhance the health and well being of both forests and the people who live in and around them. The Equitable Forest provides a detailed explanation of the descriptive, analytical and methodological tools of ACM along with accounts of early stages of its implementation in tropical regions of Asia, Africa and Latin America. Although the contributors make it clear that it is too soon to evaluate the efficacy of ACM, their work is supported by evidence that rural communities do make important contributions when involved in formal forest management, that management strategies are most effective when flexible and tailored to local contexts and that efforts by outside governmental and nongovernmental organizations to support local management are feasible from the policymaking perspective and desirable for their impact on human economic and environmental well being.

Addressing Global Environmental Security Through Innovative Educational Curricula Susan Allen-Gil, Lia Stelljes, Olena Borysova, 2008-12-03. As the importance of environmental security increases worldwide, colleges and universities are evaluating how well they are preparing the next generation of environmental scientists and managers and developing new educational approaches. In this volume we examine 1 current educational practices and the need for change, 2 educational needs from the perspective of employers and professionals and 3 new practices in higher education in environmental fields. The contributors were carefully selected by an international coordinating team based on their international reputations in the field of progressive educational approaches and understanding of the global employment market in environmental science. Although the focal geographic areas are North America, Europe and the former Soviet republics, the ideas and strategies discussed are universal to all institutions of higher education. We highlight specific non traditional approaches such as using the university as a curricular tool, developing permaculture programs and applying sustainability pedagogy and document their success from both a student and employer perspective. We also include case studies on risk assessment and eco efficiency education to illustrate why and how transdisciplinary education can be accomplished. We conclude that it is imperative that our educational systems teach environmental security at the university level within a transdisciplinary context and that opportunities such as internships and other methods of applied learning are included in the curriculum.
