Chapter 10 - Perceiving in Action

The Role of Motion Perception

- Motion is a spatiotemporal, namely the relative change of position in space in a certain amount of time.
- On top of allowing visually-guided action, motion perception is crucial for figure-ground segmentation.
- Example: a camouflaged animal is easier to see when it is moving than when it lies still.
- Motion also helps in deducing the three-dimensional structure of objects, judging of their relative position in space and optimizing our own movement.
- Motion is also important for social communication as we heavily rely on the movement of facial muscles and lips for facial expressions and language.
- Perceiving movement is important for estimating that trajectory of incoming objects in order to interact with them and avoid harm. To do so, the visual system would theoretically simply need to estimate the absolute distance and the speed of approach of the incoming object.
- Like for most of our sensory systems, we are not very good at estimating absolute distance at which objects are from us is often unknown.
- In order to circumvent such a problem, it has been suggested that the visual system

Action-Related Representations Tim Seuchter, 2020-09-23 Theories of grounded cognition state that there is a meaningful connection between action and cognition Although these claims are widely accepted the nature and structure of this connection is far from clear and is still a matter of controversy This book argues for a type of cognitive representation that essentially combines cognition and action and which is foundational for higher order cognitive capacities Action related representation is a mode of representing features of the environment in terms of possible actions Central to this concept is that even the most basic actions such as grasping or reaching are outcomes of representing features of the environment in relation to features and skills of the acting subject The author discusses the hierarchical development from egocentric context specific action related representations to abstract representations of general actions Findings from Philosophy Neuroscience and Ecological Psychology are analysed and a novel approach to the understanding of Gibson s Theory of Affordance Perception a key element of the concept of action related representation is introduced Explaining

English Synonyms Explained George Crabb, 1844 The Act of Thinking Derek Melser, 2004-09-03 A new theory proposes that thinking is a learned action In this remarkable monograph Derek Melser argues that the core assumption of both folk psychology and cognitive science that thinking goes on in the head is mistaken Melser argues that thinking is not an intracranial process of any kind mental or neural but is rather a learned action of the person After an introduction in which he makes a prima facie case that thinking is an action Melser reviews action based theories of thinking advanced by Ryle Vygotsky Hampshire and others He then presents his own theory of token concerting according to which thinking is a special kind of token performance by the individual of certain social concerted activity He examines the developmental role of concerted activity the token performance of concerted activity the functions of speech the mechanics and uses of covert tokening empathy the origins of solo action the actional nature of perception and various kinds and aspects of mature thinking In addition he analyzes the role of metaphors in the folk notion of mind While intending his theory as a contribution to the philosophy of mind Melser aims also at a larger goal to establish actions as a legitimate philosophical given self explanatory and sui generis To this end he argues in the final chapter against the possibility of scientific explanation of actions The Act of Thinking opens up a large new area for philosophical research Current Issues in Perceptual Training: Facing the Requirement to Couple Perception, Cognition, and Action in Complex Motor Behavior André Klostermann, David Mann, 2020-01-16 Sensorimotor Foundations of Higher Cognition Patrick Haggard, Yves Rossetti, Mitsuo Kawato, 2008 The first section deals with the common neural processes for primary and cognitive processes It examines the key neural systems and computational architectures at the interface between cognition sensation and action

The Timespace of Human Activity Theodore R. Schatzki, 2010-04-12 This book shows that a concept of activity timespace drawn from the work of Martin Heidegger provides new insights into the nature of activity society and history Although the book is a work of theory it has significant implications for the determination and course not just of activity but of sociohistorical change as well Drawing on empirical examples the book argues 1 that timespace is a key component of the overall space and time of social life 2 that interwoven timespaces form an essential infrastructure of important social phenomena such as power coordinated actions social organizations and social systems and 3 that history encompasses constellations of indeterminate temporalspatial events The latter conception of history in turn yields a propitious account of how the past exists in the present In addition because the concept of activity timespace highlights the teleological character of human action the book contains an extensive defense of the teleological character of such allegedly ateleological forms of activity as emotional and ceremonial actions Since finally the book s ideas about timespace and activity as an indeterminate event derive from an interpretation of Heidegger the work furthers understanding of the relevance of his thought for social and historical theory The book combines textual interpretation theoretical argumentation and empirical substantiation Many of its empirical examples are taken from the Blue Grass Horse Country around Lexington Kentucky where the author resides
