Dynamic Models and Possibility of Their Application to Planned Economic Development Angiras Shukla, 1972
Financial Sector Reform and Central Banking in Centrally Planned Economies International Monetary Fund, 1990-12-01

This paper reviews key areas of central banking reform in a sample of centrally planned economies undergoing transition to market based systems. The discussion draws mainly on the experiences of four countries: Hungary, Poland, Czechoslovakia, and China. Significant efforts have been made or are under consideration in all countries to develop a more efficient framework for monetary management and to provide greater autonomy to central banks in macro stabilization policies. These objectives call for a coordinated approach to strengthening a wide range of central banking functions simultaneously and require that a core mass of supporting financial sector reforms be implemented to ensure effective transformation and stabilization with minimal transitional costs.
