Stables, Never for a moment as we sat together in the twilight could the dear old man have imagined that just thirty years after his death his grandson would be here in a wigwam writing the story of his romantic life That story let me tell you is also the story of the old days when Wild war s deadly blast was blowing the story of the times when Napoleon was still the world s hero his glory putting in the shade even that of Wellington himself and many another great and notable general Ah me how long ago it seems now since I used to lift the sneck of Auld da s door and slip quietly in just as the shades of evening were deepening into night Is that you Williamie he would say without turning his head Yes Auld da and next moment I would be sitting on the creepie by his feet with my arm leaning on his knee waiting for a story Creepie a low stool A little little boy they tell me I was then with pale face and dark blue wondering eyes Not over strong you may guess because I lived in the realms of romance and because fairy tales stories of water kelpies that lurk in the darkest pools of forest shaded rivers and eat men s flesh at midnight stories of brownies and spunkies that bob their lights before belated travellers to lure them far across the moor to the bog in which they sink and perish and all the legends of my native Scottish land were to me as dear as the very air I breathed But pale faced though I was and not likely then to grow up an athlete I was my grandfather s favourite In Scotland far north although in the sweet summer time one can see to read nearly all night long yet in winter When the rain rains could And frost and snow on every hill the days are very short indeed and gloaming comes on at four in the afternoon or even earlier But then there is all the long delightful forenights to spend by the cheerful low fires of peat and wood so with games and music one never does feel weary and bed time comes far far too soon little garden where in the soft sweet summer time old fashioned flowers grew in banks where the honeysuckle twined over the hedge and the roses trailed above the porch was pleasant indeed A better or a bigger house than this might have been his had he cared for it but he dearly loved the children as he called my brothers and sisters and liked to be near us all Very old he was as I remember him Probably bordering upon eighty But he bore his years well though winter s snows had whitened his hair and furrowed his war bronzed face When not working in his garden he was ever ever reading and strange to say with the exception of the weekly paper his books were only two One was the Bible which every year of his life he read from beginning to end always he used to tell us discovering some new truth or truths in it the other a very large well thumbed volume called Looking unto Jesus
