

A History of Sierra Leone
1400-1787

By A. P. KUP

Lecturer in History, University College of Sierra Leone

The coast of Sierra Leone was first sighted by European explorers in the fifteenth century; but because the explorers' maps were kept secret, it was a long time before the outside world knew anything accurate about this rich corner of the African coast, and legends and misrepresentations began then were still stated as facts in the eighteenth century.

Today Sierra Leone is achieving its independence: it is, therefore, particularly valuable to have this first scholarly account of the early history of the country, from its discovery and colonisation by the Portuguese to the time, towards the end of the eighteenth century, when the British landed 450 Negroes, formerly slaves in America, and sixty white women to found a settlement. Within a few years it became a British colony.

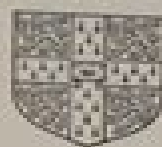

Little serious work has been done on this remote theme. Dr Kup has worked from original sources and archives in Great Britain, as well as from Portuguese and French annals, and he has now been able to discuss quite freshly, with a mass of new detail, such questions as the old trades of the coast, the life of the fairs, the clothing, the weather and the food of the people there and inland. His account of these early years is not antiquarianism, not simply a set of forays into the past: to the African reader especially, and to the student of West Africa, the early history of Sierra Leone is related for the first time in firm and full detail.
