chapter investigates motherhood imagery breastfeeding child care and child mother intimacy and the portrayal of women as caretakers and managers of the household preparing food bringing water carding and weaving or working side by side with their husbands The third chapter is dedicated to representations of women holding positions outside the house midwives maidservants wet nurses and mourners Images of women engaged in disreputable occupations dancers musicians prostitutes and courtesans complete this chapter The fourth chapter discusses images of women portrayed in the metaphorical margins looking out from the gynaikeion the women's apartments or at their private toilette it also deals with representations of women who stray from the societal mainstream concubines adulteresses women consenting to sexual acts or being coerced into them considered symbolically as belonging to the margins of society The book concludes with a discussion of the degree to which the visual material reliably reflects reality and changing attitudes toward women between Late Antiquity and late Byzantium and further to what extent it reveals embedded perceptions and conceptions of women constructed by canonic regulations and imperial law popular beliefs and accepted customs The book aims to lift a veil from known and less known works of art and to present the rarely described picture of the daily life of women in Byzantine art over a very wide chronological span of time in an effort to expand our knowledge of women in Byzantium and their realia Material Approaches to Roman

Magic Adam Parker, Stuart McKie, 2018-04-30 This second volume in the new TRAC Themes in Roman Archaeology series seeks to push the research agendas of materiality and lived experience further into the study of Roman magic a field that has until recently lacked object focused analysis Building on the pioneering studies in Boschung and Bremmer's 2015 Materiality of Magic the editors of the present volume have collected contributions that showcase the value of richly detailed context specific explorations of the magical practices of the Roman world By concentrating primarily on the Imperial period and the western provinces the various contributions demonstrate very clearly the exceptional range of influences and possibilities open to individuals who sought to use magical rituals to affect their lives in these specific contexts something that would have been largely impossible in earlier periods of antiquity Contributions are presented from a range of museum professionals commercial archaeologists university academics and postgraduate students making a compelling case for strengthening lines of communication between these related areas of expertise
