Mothers and Daughters in Nineteenth-Century America Nancy M. Theriot, 2021-05-11 The feminine script of early nineteenth century centered on women's role as patient long suffering mothers By mid century however their daughters faced a world very different in social and economic options and in the physical experiences surrounding their bodies In this groundbreaking study Nancy Theriot turns to social and medical history developmental psychology and feminist theory to explain the fundamental shift in women's concepts of femininity and gender identity during the course of the century from an ideal suffering womanhood to emphasis on female control of physical self Theriot's first chapter proposes a methodological shift that expands the interdisciplinary horizons of women's history She argues that social psychological theories recent work in literary criticism and new philosophical work on subjectivities can provide helpful lenses for viewing mothers and children and for connecting socioeconomic change and ideological change She recommends that women's historians take bolder steps to historicize the female body by making use of the theoretical insights of feminist philosophers literary critics and anthropologists Within this methodological perspective Theriot reads medical texts and woman authored advice literature and autobiographies She relates the early nineteenth century notion of true womanhood to the socioeconomic and somatic realities of middle class women's lives particularly to their experience of the new male obstetrics The generation of women born early in the century in a close mother daughter world taught their daughters the feminine script by word and action Their daughters however the first generation to benefit greatly from professional medicine had less reason than their mothers to associate womanhood with pain and suffering The new concept of femininity they created incorporated maternal teaching but altered it to make meaningful their own very different experience This provocative study applies interdisciplinary methodology to new and long standing questions in women's history and invites women's historians to explore alternative explanatory frameworks

African-American and White Adolescent Mothers Faith L. Samples, 1998 This book examines the effectiveness of nurse home visits that have designed to ensure the healthy growth and development of young children of poor unmarried African American and white adolescent mothers by enhancing the mothers social support networks Now more than ever adolescent pregnancy and out of wedlock births are among the social and economic conditions that have made it difficult for American families to sustain themselves Of primary concern is whether teenage mothers can effectively meet the needs of their infants when they themselves are grappling with developmental issues inherent in adolescence This study concludes that the results of nurse home visits for adolescent mothers are mixed depending on racial background and treatment group Nurse visits increased levels of anticipated support on the part of adolescent mothers and enhanced the level of interest that male partners had in the pregnancies Adolescent mothers without nurse visits were more likely than those with nurse visits to have high levels of child care and chore support once their children were born African American adolescents reported higher levels of support in general than did white mothers This book discusses the implications of these findings for policy
