A NARRATIVE OF THE LIFE OF JAMES PEARSE

In Two Parts . . . Containing a General Account of His Early Life; and More Particularly of Five Years Residence in the State of Mississippi and Louisiana . . . [and] An Account of His Unfortunate Imprisonment at Plattsburg, in the State of New York

by James Pearse

JAMES PEARSE was admittedly a highly prejudiced observer of early Mississippi society, but his commentary has a critical dimension not generally found in the "disgusting tales of British tourists . . . or the servile adulation of some northern people who have been flattered by southern etiquette," as Pearse himself so wisely observed. He was concerned with manners and morals, not climate and soil.

Little is known of James Pearse save the meager autobiographical details which he supplies in this little denunciation of life in the South. By his own account, Pearse was born in 1786 in Massachusetts, the son of a poor farmer. He received an indifferent, common schooling until he was 10, at which time the family moved to Vermont in hope of finding more fertile farm land. Upon reaching 21, Pearse left home and settled in northern New York. There he married and tried his hand at farming for several years.

Impatient with his financial progress, he turned to the manufacture of potash, but he lost heavily due to the economic dislocations of the War of 1812. Almost destitute, grieving over the death of a son, and hoping to cure the lingering illness of a daughter, Pearse decided in 1818 to accept his brother's invitation to manage a new plantation near Woodville, in the southwest corner of Mississippi.
