Shock Of The Old:

The Shock of the Old David Edgerton, 2007 From the books of H G Wells to the press releases of NASA we are awash in cliched claims about technology and history writes David Edgerton Now in The Shock of the Old Edgerton offers a startling new and fresh way of thinking about the history of technology radically revising our ideas about the interaction of technology and society in the past and in the present Our sense of technological time and our thinking about technology and production nationalism war and more besides will all be changed and to a surprising degree Modern technology writes Edgerton is not just a matter of electricity mass production aerospace nuclear power and the internet It also involves the rickshaw the horse corrugated iron cement DDT small arms flat pack furniture and the refrigerator The Shock of the Old challenges us to view the history of technology in terms of what everyday people have actually used and continue to use around the world rather than just what was invented The reader discovers that many highly touted technologies from the V 2 rocket to the Concorde jet have been costly failures On the other hand corrugated iron emerges as hugely important a truly global technology Its cheapness lightness ease of use and long life made it a ubiquitous material in the poor world in a way it never had been in the rich world Edgerton reassesses the significance of such acclaimed inventions as the Pill and IT and underscores the continued importance of unheralded technology debunking the idea that we live in an era of ever increasing invention and casting doubt upon the many naive assertions about the information age A provocative history in the mold of Simon Schama David S Landes and Eric Hobsbawm The Shock of the Old provides an entirely new way of looking historically at the relationship between technology and society as well as invention and innovation themselves Shock of Gray Ted
