Shoot-Out at Jasper Creek Barbara Williams, 2008-11-26 The idea for Shoot out at Jasper Creek came from a story circulated in my grandmothers neighborhood when I was a child As the story goes a thirty something mystery man who had somehow lost a good deal of his face walked around the back roads of the area at night talking to himself and his dog His looks were shocking His face and neck were bright red with waves of scaly scar tissue buckling it in all directions His looks frightened children to the point that they were afraid to wander away from their yards without their mother or father Some said that if he caught children alone he beat them with his flashlight Of course it never really happened Although the man was never actually seen by any of the local residents the folk tale persisted It is not difficult to imagine that many tales had sprung up about how the mans injuries came about For some unexplained reason one man thought he had been a former pirate One of the tales often repeated was that he was homosexual and his lover had accused him of being untrue and had shot him maiming him for life I have no idea how that story came about or whether there was even a grain of truth to it Actually I doubt that the man ever existed Novels come about for various reasons The tales have haunted my thoughts through the years It was time to bring the mystery man to life Shoot out At Jasper Creek is my version of the story Im a lover of Western lore and I live in the West so I decided to put the story in context by placing it in the country I know the best with realistic western characters and their local speech habits Novels come about for various reasons Shoot out At Jasper Creek is my way of explaining the folk tale about my grandmothers mystery neighbor who whether he actually existed in the real world or not was very real to a community of folks who had a lot of questions but none of the answers I dont have them either but I found myself plotting
