

Slippery Slopes in the Seas

Icebergs can be slippery slopes for ships at sea. An iceberg can be dangerous to ships because more than three-fourths of it is under the water. Most of it isn't visible. Icebergs are found in the cold seas near the North and South Poles. The wind and currents move them through the water. As they move, icebergs often make creaking sounds. This sound has earned them the nickname of "growlers." Icebergs might be useful, too. Some scientists think these huge, freshwater chunks of ice could be towed to other places. Then the icebergs could be used to provide water to deserts.
