

HOW FAMILIES CAN HELP A RECOVERING ALCOHOLIC

There are many ways you can be there for your loved one as they journey down the road to recovery. Here's how families can help a recovering alcoholic, and how they can support them through their struggles and triumphs.

1 Educate yourself on alcoholism

Consider inquiring about your family member's personal experience, reading up on subjects such as triggers, learning about physical and psychological changes, and studying possible relapse signs.

2 Learn the signs of a relapse

These may vary, but common signs include:

- the individual is withdrawing from others
- they're experiencing rapid weight loss or weight gain
- they're lashing out against others

3 Remove possible triggers

Triggers come in a variety of forms and may give the person in recovery the urge to drink. Whether it's passing a bar, seeing an empty alcohol bottle, pent-up negative emotions, or even just boredom, each poses its own threat to sobriety.

4 Encourage them during recovery

One of the best ways families can help a recovering alcoholic is to encourage them and their healthy lifestyle choices. Through both your actions and your words, you can validate them, remind them that you're proud, and encourage them however possible.

5 Know that it may not always be smooth sailing

Keep in mind that there may be some rocky waters ahead. These hard times will be very painful for your family member, so it's important to not show judgment during these times. Rather, give them the love and support they need.

6 Always show them love and support

Ultimately, love and support are what everyone craves. Struggling with alcoholism can leave a person's self-esteem and psyche damaged. As a family member who loves them, you can help foster positivity and healing within their life.
