Black Thought Victor Peterson II, 2022-02-27 This book uncovers a logical fallacy underlying Afro Pessimism and provides a formal theory of Articulation teasing out new reflections on race and Blackness Afro Pessimism maintains that Blacks subject to a subordinate position in society suffer a cultural death In this monograph Victor Peterson rejects this theory demonstrating that Black subjectivity is inherently multiple articulating identities appropriate to the contexts in which it finds itself and yet remaining continuous across its individual but not mutually exclusive instantiations Peterson argues that we should consider the mechanisms that produce the conditions under which individuals obtain positions of either dominance or subordination By providing a working logical foundation for Articulation theory within cultural studies Peterson encourages us to rethink the politics of racial identity and subjectivity in contemporary social life Encouraging critical thought about the arbitrarily determined but instrumentally objective of our global racial order this book will be of great interest to scholars of Black Studies sociology cultural studies and philosophy
