

DISCOVERING OUR HERITAGE THE IMPORTANCE OF HERITAGE EVALUATIONS

An early evaluation of possible cultural heritage resources in a defined area or project site is provided by a Cultural Heritage Screening Report. In order to identify any notable cultural heritage places or artefacts that may be impacted, this report is frequently undertaken as part of the planning process for development projects. The report evaluates the likelihood of discovering cultural heritage materials using a combination of desk research, site visits, and stakeholder feedback. It also makes recommendations for further study or, if necessary, mitigating steps.

An interdisciplinary method for locating, evaluating, and protecting cultural heritage resources is known as cultural resource management. Archaeological sites, historic structures, customary cultural landscapes, and other material and immaterial objects of cultural importance are examples of these resources. To ensure the appropriate stewardship of cultural resources, CRM specialists work across a variety of professions, such as environmental science, architecture, history, anthropology, and archaeology.

Maintaining cultural heritage while balancing the demands of development initiatives is the main objective of CRM. To identify cultural resources and lessen any negative consequences that development may have on them, this entails performing surveys, assessments, and impact evaluations. To guarantee that cultural values and viewpoints are taken into account during the decision-making process, CRM also entails community participation and stakeholder collaboration.
