Absicherung werden analysiert und verglichen In einer vertiefenden theoretischen Analyse untersucht der Autor Reformmöglichkeiten der privaten und der gesetzlichen Krankenversicherung German description How can it be avoided that consumers face premium risk i e increases in their premiums when their health status deteriorates Mathias Kifmann examines how this problem which is a major challenge for private health insurance markets can be solved Three principal ways to insure premium risk which preserve competition among health insurers are analyzed and compared Guaranteed renewable contracts ensure premiums independent of changes in the health status by requiring a life time commitment to an insurer Premium insurance compensates an increase in premiums if the health status changes Under community rating the government rules out risk based premiums by requiring that insurers set a uniform premium for all insured Mathias Kifmann pays particular attention to the challenges posed by managed care He argues that managed care can aggravate the lock in problem under guaranteed renewable contracts He demonstrates that an alternative contract is superior to guaranteed renewable contracts This contract creates incentives for insurers to behave in the interest of consumers by specifying payments upon switching to another insurer If insurers are community rated an important question is whether they should be allowed to offer managed care besides traditional health insurance The author shows that managed care can be used as a pure risk selection device under community rating However the introduction of managed care can also be to the benefit of everyone To obtain such welfare gains it may be necessary to tax some insurance plans and to subsidize others Selected Appropriate Technologies for Developing Countries United States.
